Dr. Maher, originally from Pittsburgh, now resides with her husband and two children in Alexandria, Virginia. She earned her undergraduate degree from Georgetown University where she stayed to complete medical school. She then did a residency in internal medicine at MedStar Georgetown University Hospital, following which she began practicing as a hospitalist there and then returned to pursue a fellowship in rheumatology.

During her fellowship, Dr. Maher received several awards, led a project to improve osteoporosis treatment in veterans, and co-designed a patient advocacy training program.

Dr. Maher treats all types of rheumatic conditions and has a special interest in rheumatoid arthritis, scleroderma, osteoporosis, and gout.
